New Features for Omnivore™

With Ocean Systems' Omnivore 1.6, after capturing video evidence at uncompressed quality for analysis, you can now export it to Windows® Media® (.WMV) as your distribution format for illustrative purposes.

Exporting .MWV directly from Omnivore provides a format which is smaller and can be easily played on Windows systems using Windows Media Player. This helps address new court mandates without the need to learn third party encoding software which may not maintain quality and the proper aspect ratio of the video.

Next Generation Raptor II Camera

Vigilant Video has released its next generation Raptor Camera which is even more effective for scanning license plates. The Raptor II's low profile dual lens (color and IR) camera has a compact form factor which scans license plates up to 60 feet away at speeds over 120 mph. The new intelligent camera is an integral part of Vigilant Video's CarDetector system which is only one component of the company's enterprise LPR vision. When a license plate is scanned by this new camera, the CarDetector software interprets the license plate number and creates an LPR record with date, time and location data – all done independently of the license plate's design, color or origin. The camera's form factor is small enough for a lightbar, a grille or nonintrusive trunk mounting applications.

Force Science Research Center Recommends Next Steps after an OIS

At a two-hour panel at the International Association of Chiefs of Police Conference last October, three Force Science Research Center experts offered their professional opinions on how law enforcement agencies should handle officer involved shooting investigations. To avoid emotional trauma caused by investigators whom officers interrogate more like suspects than fellow officers, the experts recommended the following:

• Limit on-scene comments to brief statements about public safety, including information about injuries to the officer and others; whether suspects are still at large and in what direction they traveled; weapons they're armed with; and whether evidence exists and needs to be preserved. Answers to questions which have nothing to do with public safety can be gleaned from other sources, including witnesses and audio/video recordings. Officers should be trained to answer these (but no other) questions without legal or union representation.

• Allow officers to rest before formal interviews. This improves memory not just for officers, but also for their interviewers.

• Transport officers to the hospital, even if they appear to be fine. The adrenaline dump from an armed confrontation can mask injuries and aggravate underlying internal conditions. Also, a controlled and secure environment can protect officers from media, the public, and even anxious supervisors.

• Provide independent legal representation. By preventing an officer from talking too much, immediate representation can help both the officer and the agency avoid civil liability and should not be construed as a way to cover or spin wrongdoing. However, representation should be independent, not union provided; union attorneys are typically trained for labor issues, not shootings.

• Allow an officer to walk through the shooting scene privately with his (or her) attorney. This can improve memory recall.

• During the formal interview, allow the officer to choose the setting and use a "cognitive interview" technique. Not only does this also improve memory recall, it also shows the officer's state of mind at the time of the shooting. Cognitive interviewing focuses on rapport building and collaboration and helps the officer put the shooting in context. It also allows the officer virtually uninterrupted narration, in contrast to typical interrogations. The technique can help obtain up to 55% more information as a result.

• Have a policy which goes beyond scene management to managing the entire flow of a post-shooting follow-up.

For a free copy of the handbook, Officer-Involved Shooting Workshop, E-mail john.bostain@dhs.gov; for information on training for cognitive interviewing, E-mail Dr. Edward Geiselman at geiselma@psych.ucla.edu.

After the investigators leave the scene...

What happens next?

Many community members are still unaware that professional cleaning services for traumatic events exist.

If first responders don't refer a company, who does the family turn to?

YellowPages? The internet? Neighbor? Friend?

These sources are often unreliable and provide families with companies that are not properly trained or licensed to perform crime and trauma scene cleanup. These companies may provide more of a disservice and leave families still dealing with the tragedy.

Why Choose a Professional Crime Scene Cleanup Company?

Most people don't realize how many regulations must be followed and how much training is required to be compliant in the crime and trauma scene industry. When companies cut corners the families and communities suffer. Our mission has always been to provide the highest quality customer service while following the procedures necessary to properly remediate each situation and prevent the spread of disease. No family should have to deal with these situations alone.

IT IS IRONIC, ISN'T IT?

Criticism of honest, hardworking police officers says a lot about a movement which claims to support the average "Joe."

These are strange times. We have large groups of protestors "occupying" parks and other public areas to protest that they don't have as much as some people. They are tired of the greed and wealth of corporate America and they see themselves as "oppressed." They want more equality and less rich people, I think. They also said that they want "justice." Okay, more on that later.

These folks are getting into skirmishes with police officers because officers are being sent to the protest sites to enforce laws like vagrancy and blocking the sidewalk, camping without permits, and all kinds of related minor stuff. These skirmishes turn ugly and get national attention when officers pepper spray people, arrest some of them, and so on. Then, of course, as it always happens, the police are vilified for being the attack dogs of capitalist America and all this other old rhetoric we heard back in the sixties.

This cyclorama of public strife has been played out now all over the nation and, actually, all over the world. In fact, it supposedly started in Spain with a group who called themselves Los Indignados – the Indignant Ones.

Anyway, it seems the protestors are out in big numbers every day. That's significant to mention because this means that either they don't work or they can afford to take time off from work to protest. The ones who work are taking sick leave or vacation time, or just going AWOL. Sick leave and vacation time are usually only available with big companies or government jobs. Either way, let's call this Irony #1.

Then, the police come in to enforce misdemeanors. The same police who bust their ass for the whopping rate of about $35,000 a year – which is what Warren Buffet makes in, oh...there! He just made it as you read this sentence. Bam – 35 grand, just like that. So, the police come in and they have to drag a bunch of "aromatic" protestors off to jail (for misdemeanors) and they become the target of hatred and derision because they are believed to be part of the problem somehow. What these protestors don't know might amaze them if they took the time to read the newspaper – instead of using it to sleep on in the park.

They have missed the stories about police officers being laid off. They missed the stories about budget cuts in local and state governments which are strangling pension and insurance systems to the point where these fabulously wealthy police officers, making their $35,000 per year, are being asked to pony up more money from their bank accounts to help pay for what the public used to pay for – their retirement and their health insurance. Officers down here were recently hung over a precipice by the county mayor who told everyone that, by a certain date, 130 officers would get pink slips. The officers (including one who lives next door to me) were stressed beyond belief and my neighbor even started interviewing with other departments. It was all a big scare tactic and it never happened. But, it has happened in many jurisdictions. So, the very cops who are carting the hooky playing/non-working protestors off to jail are the ones suffering in real time (not in theory) from the very economic trials the protestors are screeching about. If they knew some of these facts, they would be sympathizing with the officers. This easily qualifies as Irony #2.

One of the signs I saw being held by one of those guys wearing an "anonymous" joker mask bore the heading, "Early Warning Signs of Fascism." Under that was a list which included statements like, "Supremacy of Law Enforcement and the Military." Really? Supremacy? Our $35,000 per year officers who are scraping the bottom of the barrel to feed their families are part of the supremacy in this country? Tell that to the 22 year veteran officer I spoke to who was in tears and is about to lose her stripes and is being demoted back to patrol officer, and is being sent from her position as a detective back to the road to protect the public which includes protestors. Are there any objections to making this Irony #3? I thought not.

The same sign lists as one of its early signs of fascism, "Powerful and Continuing Nationalism." I'm wondering exactly what they mean by that. Is the powerful nationalism the same kind which has supported the protestors' First Amendment right to free speech? Do any of these people understand what would happen to them if they tried this in another country? The Constitution of the United States is our country's "powerful and continuing nationalism." It is powerful and it continues because it entitles every citizen with the choice to go to work or go to a park and protest, as long as it is done peacefully. Fascism? If someone from North Korea was allowed out of his country, I believe he would be so deeply offended that he would gladly fly here just to slap the mask right off that guy's face. What an insult! This is a shoo-in for Irony #4.

Look, I am not crazy about our economic situation. I believe we need certain reforms and ways which hardworking, honest people (like most of the police officers I know) are not punished and trod upon unreasonably. But, there is nothing anywhere in the Constitution, the Bible, or anywhere in life, for that matter, which says everything is going to be distributed equally.

My mother came from a country where "poor" and "oppressed" means that millions live on the street or in the park, 24/7, and the food they eat is bought with whatever they can beg for, and very few people even care – the government included.

Here, the very small percentage of people who are on the street have opportunities, homeless shelters, welfare and food stamp programs, unemployment compensation, and other amazing gifts which are simply unheard of in other places around the globe. People who have lost their jobs have a remedy – perhaps not a perfect one – but a means to recoup something, at least. Here, churches, civic organizations, and, yes, big corporate America donate hundreds of millions of dollars of time and energy to try to assist those in need.

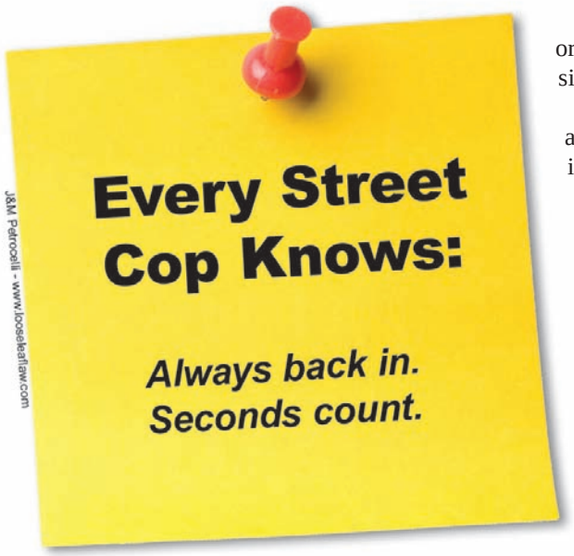
I spent a day with hundreds of other volunteers in a financially downtrodden and crime-ridden area of Miami building new homes. It's called Habitat for Humanity. The volunteers came from some of the biggest companies in the country. Habitat's corporate partners – and biggest donors of personnel and money – include Citibank®, Delta Air Lines, Wells Fargo, Nissan®, Mary Kay®, State Farm®, and Bank of America® which alone has donated over 200,000 volunteers and over 24 million dollars to Habitat's cause.

A New York Times blog estimated that, on a given day, there are about 70,000 protestors involved in the occupy movement nationwide. I don't begrudge anyone his (or her) right to protest, but I have to wonder: If you could get those 70,000 people to do one day's work with Habitat for Humanity, how many homes could you build for people who can't afford to pay for one? This is Irony #5, but, at this point, who's counting?



I'm of the belief that, for every 70,000 people in this country who are willing to sit in a park or march in a street, there are 100,000 people who quietly work behind the scenes, doing great things and helping those less fortunate than themselves, or protecting the rights of those who want to just sit and chant.

It's that very irony which keeps our strange and wonderful 236 yearlong experiment evolving and moving forward.

IN DEFENSE OF THE "WEAKER SEX"

Questions arise regarding the decision behind a recent promotion.

Dear Mike,

I've been a police officer in the Midwest for 12 years. Last fall, our department held a promotional test for sergeant. The final list came out about a month ago and, last week, the chief promoted a police officer who only has five years on the job. You have to have a minimum of five years on the job to be promoted in our agency and the chief promoted her with only five years and three months on the job. She barely qualifies! She has very little investigative experience; isn't on any special teams or special details; and everyone knows that she can't handle being on the street. Openings for sergeants don't come very often in our department and a lot of us are really upset that this underqualified female is now a boss. Why would the chief promote someone who gets no respect from the other police officers? How can someone who is supposed to be a leader really lead when no one likes her?

There's a couple different ways of looking at this problem. The simple response would be to tell you to "suck it up and deal with it," but I think there are some issues which deserve consideration.

Are you upset with the promotional process or the person who got promoted?

Is the promotional testing process at your police department fair? Are the rules being followed? Up to this point, have there been any problems with other promotions? If the promotional process is not fair and the rules are not being followed, then you have a legitimate right to complain. I suggest that you file a grievance with your union or, if that is not an option, then I suggest that the officers who feel that it's unfair direct their concerns to the chief. It could be that a change in the promotional rules may be needed to make the promotional process more fair.

Let's assume that the process is fair. Well, that means we need to look at the people involved in the process. First, let's begin by taking a good hard look at yourself in a mirror. What did you do to prepare yourself for the promotional test? It takes a lot more than having 12 years of job experience to score well on a written promotional test. Usually, the people who prepare the most do the best. What other criteria was used for the final score on that test? Did you score well on the oral board interview? Did you have outstanding performance evaluations which set you apart from the other candidates? Did you have anything on your résumé (your motivation, leadership skills or other assets) which would indicate to your bosses that you are actively preparing yourself for the role of a sergeant? So, let's be honest here: Are you annoyed at yourself for not finishing first on the sergeant's list?

Second, let's talk about the person who got the stripes. You stated that she "barely qualifies" for the new position. Well, the point I would remind you about is that whether it's "barely," or not, she does qualify. She passed every phase in your agency's promotional process and apparently did a lot better than the other police officers who took the test. For every promotional test, most of the people who take the test end up being disappointed. So, I guess you can hold a grudge against an officer who has less experience than you. That's the easy thing to do. Or, I guess you could accept what happened and do what you can to support the new sergeant. When you hold a grudge against someone, the negative feelings you hold onto can simmer inside of you and can suck the joy out of your life. The "job" you are doing as a police officer is tough enough without you adding more negatives.

I might be reading too much into your question, but some readers might get the impression that you are most upset about having a female as your boss. (You did make a point of describing your new boss as an "underqualified female.") The gender barrier in policing was broken decades ago. Some people haven't accepted that yet and they get in serious trouble because they haven't accepted it. Don't become one of them!

One final thought about your closing comment ("How can someone who is supposed to be a leader really lead when no one likes her?"). Many people in law enforcement of all ranks (including police officers) lack leadership skills. I am convinced that this is one of the most critical elements to a successful career. Many people "survive" with no, or limited, leadership skills, but few are "successful." All of us need to continually remind ourselves that we are being judged every day – in what job we have, by our coworkers, our bosses, and the people with whom we deal. They judge us by our actions; they judge us by our deeds, not by our words; and they judge us by the results of our deeds, not the excuses we make for not achieving them. So, maybe your new boss has not demonstrated outstanding leadership skills which might inspire you to support her in her new job. But, not supporting her will not help her develop whatever skills she might be lacking. Some people demonstrate leadership skills in many ways early in their career and some people are "late bloomers" in learning how to be a successful leader. You have a choice whether to continue to create problems for the new sergeant and become part of the problem or to take the high road and, maybe, become part of the solution.

You cannot change what has happened. The way I see it, you have two choices: Accept the decision which the chief has made and make the best of it; or let it eat at you and make the worst of it.

Dear Mike,

I've been a police officer for about six years and do a pretty good job. I know that I am not the most popular guy in the department, but I do what I'm supposed to do, stay out of trouble and keep a low profile. It's not that I'm antisocial, but the guys on the department are very "cliquey" – they all hang out together on-duty and off-duty and I'm just not in the clique. (It's a pretty small department, so that creates some problems.) I've been doing okay under those circumstances until about six months ago. We got a new police officer and I knew right from the beginning that the "guys" were out after him. He doesn't fit into their mold – and so they decided to start "having fun" with him. The work he tries to do gets sabotaged by other officers. Someone "found out" that this officer is gay and, of course, now everyone in the department and out on the street knows about it (I know for a fact that he is not, but what difference does it make if he is!). There have been two internal investigations against him in the last month which were both based on false allegations started, and supported, by other police officers (I overheard them talking and laughing about it). There's more, but you get the idea.

So, my problem is: What do I do about it? If I stand up for the "new guy," then I know for sure that I could be targeted next. If I sit back and watch and do nothing, then this kid's career will be ruined and I didn't do anything to stop it.

You are in the middle of what could be a career ending (or at least career damaging) problem. This is one of those situations in which I realize that I am not in any position to give you direct advice, for fear that you'll make a decision based on what I write. But, I think you know what limited options you have.

Is there someone of any rank in your department whom you trust enough to talk to in confidence? Of course, you run the risk of this confidence being broken. But, even if the confidence is maintained and certain actions result in "favor" of the new guy, there might be some speculation where certain information originated from (...you).

You could offer some generic comments to "the group" in casual conversation. ("Come on, guys, stop picking on the rookie.")

Of course, there are more formal actions you (or he) could take. One option would be to file a formal harassment complaint through your agency's (or municipality's) human resources department. If his investigations are being sabotaged, then that might border on criminal actions being taken against those officers. The county prosecutor's office could file criminal charges.

Or, of course, you can keep doing what you are doing – flying low under the radar and not getting involved. Take care of your career and let others take care of their career. Is this battle worth fighting or should you save your ammunition for a battle in which you get involved? You could decide that the rookie is a "big boy" and should be able to handle his own problems. Some people would take the position that "it's a cold, cruel world out there and only the strong survive."

At the end of the day, each person makes decisions with which they have to live. Sometimes, we base these decisions on our morals and our values. But, some of these decisions are also based on the reality that every battle can't be won.

The only person who can tell you what to do in this case is you. Whatever choice you make, there will be a price to pay.

The EPLI™ (Executive Precision Lighting Instrument) is a slim (5.125" long), waterproof tactical light made from high-grade aircraft aluminum and is powered by two AAA batteries. To turn it on, users can either fully click the tail switch or the momentary feature can be used by pressing the switch halfway in to turn it on for a second or two. Repeatedly pressing the button halfway will switch the light from high (160 lumens) to low (ten lumens) to strobe.

As much as lumen output matters, a flashlight's optical characteristics – its beam forming properties – matter even more to its ability to project useful light in a useful direction. All Mag® flashlights feature adjustable focusing for a brighter, tighter, farther-reaching beam. The smaller flashlights shown all have ANSI beam distances exceeding 135 meters; the larger flashlights' beam distances all exceed 250 meters (more than 2 ½ football fields).

NEW GUNS FOR 2012

Police and Security News* brings you its 21st annual roundup of new firearms - straight from America's premier firearms trade show event.

The gun industry is more than alive and well; it's prospering, based on the large increase of NICS checks done on the legal sales of firearms. The other telling indicator is that there's not much new this year, as just about all gunmakers of other than the traditional hunting arms are trying to catch up on months of back orders. The general attitude is that there's no point in bringing out "new" when they can't satisfy "current" demand. With this in mind, some of the gun companies have chosen to enhance and modify their existing product in response to customer feedback, such as adding a gun mounted laser as a factory option, for instance.

Customers appear to be most interested in handguns which are easy to carry, manipulate and conceal. Also, there's some interest in the gun's safety features. Caliber falls in this mix along the way, but seems not to be a driving force past the buyer gaining assurances – or reenforcing existing beliefs – that a particular caliber is sufficient for self-defense and that the recoil of the gun will be manageable. Semiautos are usually their focus, but some folks will entertain the notion of a revolver if it is also small, lightweight and priced in the same range as the semiauto.

Kimber's Micro CDP (Custom Defense Package) pistol with Crimson Trace laser grips

As to AR-15-based rifles (aka "modern sporting rifle"), there are almost too many makers or parts assemblers to count. (I think they now outnumber those involved in the 1911 genre.)

To follow are the latest innovations from the best known manufacturers. As always, we strive to concentrate on those new firearms which have more law enforcement "appeal" – either to agencies or individual sworn personnel.

Kimber Mfg., Inc.

Kimber adds to its subcompact line with the Micro CDP (Custom Defense Package) pistol which is a .380 ACP chambered, single-action 1911 look-alike whose construction follows that of the Colt® Mustang® Pocketlite and the SIG SAUER® Model P238 in the same caliber. This means that the Micro CDP controls – manual safety, slide stop and magazine catch – are only mounted on the left side of the frame and in 1911 locations. The Micro CDP has fixed sights which are windage adjustable. Delivery is forecast for late 2012.

Springfield has added another subcompact – the XD-S™ – to its line.

Springfield Armory USA®

Springfield Armory also adds a subcompact, the XD-S™, as part of its XD® line of polymer and steel striker-fired handguns. The XD-S is chambered in .45 ACP and holds six rounds in its metal magazine. Its overall length is 6.3", the barrel length is 3.3" and the pistol is only one inch thick. Well suited for use as a concealed carry pistol, this design offers a single position Picatinny rail, making it one of the only pistols of its size which can be accessorized with lights and lasers. Two interchangeable backstraps allow you to customize the grip and the contour of the grip makes it possible for nearly any size hand to release the magazine without twisting or moving away from the firing grip. The XD-S has many of the same safety features as other XD models: the Ultra Safety Assurance (USA) Trigger System™, a loaded chamber indicator and a grip safety.

While sharing the XD look and operation, very few parts interchange with other XD models.

GLOCK® introduced three new Gen4 models at this year's SHOT Show®.

GLOCK®, Inc.

GLOCK continues to broaden its Gen4 series which have a smaller base grip with two add-on backstraps to change grip girth and frame texturing. The combination speaks to those who like the GLOCK pistol, but find they have difficulty gripping it. The new surface treatment does improve one's gripping ability. This year, the Gen4 treatment has been applied to the GLOCK Models 21 (.45 ACP), 32 (.357 SIG), and 34 (9x19).

GLOCK has also addressed the problem of slide "bite" when, due to having too high a grip or too large a hand, the slide tracks over the web of your gun hand. The solution is another add-on backstrap which has its grip tang extended more to the rear than is the area on the standard frame. No further details were forthcoming when, on the last day of the show, the "no bite" backstrap was passed around the GLOCK booth. Thus, no information was available as to cost and availability, but this will, I'm sure, be quickly corrected.

The Colt® Mustang® Pocketlite measures 5.5" long.

Colt Defense, LLC

Colt had a novel attention getter at its booth. No, not a "booth babe." It's better! A functioning, historically accurate, 1877 Bulldog Gatling Gun for sale at $49,995!! Initial production was 50 units and I was told that, by the end of the show, all 50 units had already been sold.

Back on planet Earth, Colt is now shipping the company's reintroduced .380 ACP chambered Colt Mustang Pocketlite pistol and the .45 ACP 1911 Colt Rail Gun®. For those not familiar with the original Mustang Pocketlite, it follows the appearance and trigger system of a 1911. Its magazine capacity is six rounds; it weighs 13.7 ounces; and it is one inch thick at its widest.

I received samples of both the Mustang and the Rail Gun prior to the show and both performed satisfactorily, being reliable, accurate and with some (if not all) sharp edges removed. Colt also reintroduced the National Match Target Model 1911 and the Single-Action Army New Frontier Model.

Sturm, Ruger & Co., Inc.

Ruger has yet another new pistol – the SR22 in .22 LR. In appearance, it doesn't show any prior Ruger .22 handgun heritage. The SR22 is double- and single-action. Its barrel is user removable and Ruger intends to offer a threaded barrel, suitable for a sound moderator. Sights are fully adjustable and the grip can be altered by using one of two supplied grip sleeves which fit over the inner core "grip." The magazine (two are supplied) capacity is ten rounds. Its frame is polymer and the slide is aluminum, with a pinned in steel breech face insert containing the extractor and firing pin assembly.

Kahr Arms

Kahr Arms has revised the double-action trigger on the P9, PM9 and PM40, with the trigger pull distance now being 33% shorter. A manual safety, which moves UP to fire and DOWN for safe, has been added and placed at the top left rear of the frame. A magazine disconnect and loaded chamber indicator have also been added. (The safety, indicator and disconnector additions were done to make the pistols legal to sell under some state laws.) To lower the pistols' manufacturing costs and MSRP, markings have been engraved, not roll marked, and the slide has received less machining. The barrel has conventional rifling, replacing the higher cost Lothar Walther barrel used in the higher priced versions of these models. The revised models ship with one magazine.

Kahr has also added the CM40 to its CM Series of pistols. The CM40 boasts sights which are drift adjustable in the rear and a polymer front sight which features a white bar dot configuration. The slide does lock back after firing the last round – a feature which is sometimes missing on other value priced compact semiautos – and is machined from solid 416 stainless steel with a matte finish. Each gun ships with one stainless steel magazine with a flush floor plate.

Caracal pistols: Model F (Full), bottom; Model C (Compact), top

Caracal International, LLC

The Caracal pistol, Models F (Full) and C (Compact), is the result of Wilhelm Bubits and his Caracal design group. The Caracal (the name of a wild desert cat) is a polymer and steel semiauto pistol which reflects Mr. Bubits' experience in handgun design and his past employ with Steyr and GLOCK firearms manufacturers.

Circle 2032 for More Information

The Caracal embodies the construction and features (striker-fired, for example) of similar polymer and steel handguns presently in the handgun market. The F Model holds 18 + 1 rounds and weighs 27.9 ounces, while the C Model holds 15 + 1 rounds and weighs 26.1 ounces.

In 2007, the design was sold to an entity in Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates (UAE). That same year, the pistol passed a handgun test identified as the WTD91 protocol for the German Army.

I had both versions of the Caracal for T&E and they worked well...about the same as other top rated pistols of this genre. The gun has a low bore axis and a 111 degree grip to frame angle which, for me, did minimize muzzle flip. There were no malfunctions and accuracy results were also on a par for such designs.

Taurus International Mfg., Inc.

A few years back, Taurus went "big" with its Judge® Model .410 shotshell/.45 Colt revolver. This year, Taurus went small with its pocket pistols, the Models 22PLY chambered in .22 LR and 25PLY in .25 ACP. The two models are almost identical. In construction, they use metal for all but the polymer grip and magazine base plate. They have a spurless, flush fit to the slide hammer, manual thumb safety and magazine disconnector. The latter freezes the trigger and slide such that the slide cannot be retracted, nor the trigger pulled, when the magazine is removed.

The polymer grip surface is very lightly pebbled, with matching horizontal finger depressions in the upper sides of the grip. The grip backstrap curves such that the web of your grasping hand is directed up against the small, rounded beavertail on the frame.

I've shot both, although I spent more time with the .22 because the ammo was cheaper. The only failures were when the 22PLY got dirty. Lube and/or cleaning reset the clock, so to speak, for another 50 rounds. The 25PLY stopped once, not liking the greening, "coffee can" .25 ACP we ammo fed it. The grip area is fatter than some might like for deep concealment, but being able to get more hand on the gun helped me make better hits.

The Model P229 has been reduced in size to become the P224.

SIG SAUER®, Inc.

Keeping up with new offerings from SIG SAUER could be a full-time job. This year, the well respected Model P229 has been shortened in length and height to become the P224, resulting in a more concealable double column pistol. The P224 comes in four models and three calibers. The latter are 9x19mm, .357 SIG and .40 S&W. Initial P224s will have the DAK (Double-Action Kellerman) trigger.

SIG SAUER has now upsized its .380 ACP chambered, single-action, 1911-style Model P238 which has a six round magazine capacity, into the

Circle 2033 for More Information

Model P938, chambered for the 9x19mm round, with the same six round magazine capacity. And, this has been done with only slight increases in weight and size. Ambidextrous thumb safeties have been added to both the P238 and the P938.

Smith & Wesson® has brought back the Model 586.

Smith & Wesson®, Inc.

Smith & Wesson has added to its Classic line by bringing back the carbon steel, blue finished Model 586 which is a six round double-action revolver chambered in .357 Magnum and .38 Special. The 586 can be had with a four or six inch barrel. A red ramp front sight and the familiar S&W windage and elevation adjustable, white outline notch rear sight go along with the checkered, square butt target grips and vertically serrated backstrap.

Representing Walther® in the U.S., Smith & Wesson is the exclusive distributor of Walther products. On display at the show was the Walther P22 pistol with an integrated laser which is built into the frame of the pistol forward of the trigger guard.

The P22 has a lightweight polymer frame and metal slide. It wears adjustable sights and has a 3.42" barrel which is threaded for installing a sound moderator. The trigger is double-action/single-action and an ambidextrous safety and magazine release have been used. The cross-directional textured grip has two backstraps to change grip thickness. The pistol ships with one ten round magazine.

Remington® Arms Co., Inc.

Last year, Remington (part of the Freedom Group) introduced the carbon steel and dark finished, full-sized 1911 Model R1™. It has a flat and grooved mainspring housing; a short, grooved trigger; an enlarged ejection port; and highly visible fixed sights. The wood grip panels are double diamond checkered.

This year, the R1 is also available in stainless steel. Plus, there's another stainless steel model – the Enhanced R1 – which adds to the foregoing features with an adjustable rear sight, fiber-optic front sight, beavertail grip safety, wide manual thumb safety and serrations on its front strap. Both models ship with two magazines: The R1 with two seven round magazines and the Enhanced R1 with one eight round and one seven round magazine.

Rock River Arms, Inc.

Rock River Arms did some great work building 1911 pistols, but put them aside to devote all of the company's time to building ARs. Apparently, the folks at Rock River have changed direction once more, going back to a full-size 1911, but this time one with a polymer frame. The polymer surrounds a steel insert, with the remainder of the gun being steel with a Parkerized finish, save for a polymer trigger and mainspring housing. The pistol uses a standard 1911 magazine. No word yet on when it might be available, but knowing the Rock River Arms folks, it should be worth the wait.

FNH USA LLC

FNH USA, a subsidiary of FN Herstal S.A., introduced the FNS pistol at SHOT – Models FNS-9 and FNS-40 in 9x19mm and .40 S&W, respectively. I had previously tested the now older model, the FN, which uses the traditional DA/SA trigger system. The gun and its trigger were rock solid and easy to shoot well. That said, arguably a good striker-fired trigger system is easier to learn and certainly easier with which to become proficient; hence, the new FNS pistol.

The FNS has an ambidextrous frame mounted thumb safety, slide stop and magazine catch. It has two interchangeable backstraps and a good application of "checkering" on its polymer frame whose dustcover wears a 1913 accessory rail.

The forged slide, barrel and full-length recoil spring guide rod are stainless steel. Front and rear cocking serrations are provided, along with three dot, windage adjustable night sights. The magazine capacity is 17 rounds for the FNS-9 and 14 rounds for the FNS-40. Each pistol ships with three magazines.

Final Thought

As can be seen from the foregoing, handgun manufacturers are responding to market demands for personal self-defense handguns with but few exceptions. The handguns shown at SHOT ranged from prototypes to those starting into production over the next two quarters of 2012. The usual answer given when asked about when the gun would be at a local dealer most times was, "Probably third or fourth quarter [of 2012]." Overall, though, this is not a bad thing for the gun business and for those who want to be – and can be – legally armed.

Edged Weapon Research Helps Police Profile Violent Criminals

NEWS

The award winning Center for Homicide Research which is located in Minneapolis (MN) has been working with the FBI's Behavioral Analysis Unit (part of the National Center for the Analysis of Violent Crime) to examine relationships between victim and killer in edged weapon murders. The goal is to see whether wound pattern and number correlates to relationship.

The center already boasts what's said to be the largest database of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender homicides in the country. It has grown from 65 gay homicide cases in Minnesota to 3,082 cases in the country. An estimated three percent of all homicides are related to the victim's and/or offender's homosexuality, but they are not all hate crimes committed by strangers. Rather, intimate partners or acquaintances commit most of the murders.

Also, in contrast to nongay murders, victims are stabbed or beaten more often than shot and victims are usually many years older than their killers. The murders are frequently the killers' first. And, when an edged weapon is their choice, they often stab their victims with more force and more times than they need to kill. Many of the murders in the center's database show 50 to 100 stab wounds. In all, the center's database keeps track of 230 variables, including ligature strangulation and bondage, mutilation, and whether the victim was found naked.

These characteristics have led to a profile of some killers who can be described as "shamed" because they are homosexual, but don't self-identify as gay. These killers tend to commit their crimes just after having sex when they feel the most shame.

Besides gay homicides, the Center for Homicide Research is also developing a database of convenience store robbery homicides. It works with investigative units and task forces nationwide. To learn more, visit www.homicidecenter.org.

New Risk Management Policies Intend to Help LAPD Avoid Costly Collisions

In the past three years, Los Angeles police have averaged about one traffic collision per day. The collisions' severity ranged from minor to fatal, with some crashes totaling police cars and others causing severe injuries. The collisions resulted in a quarter of the 1,900 lawsuits filed against the LAPD since 2002, and the city has paid almost $138 million in settlements or verdicts over nine years; in some cases, officers clearly broke both traffic laws and SOP.

Training alone isn't helping, so police are putting new policies in place to prevent future collisions. A risk manager was hired to fill a brand-new position, while LAPD Chief Charlie Beck wants to improve the way the agency identifies problem officers and corrects their behavior before a lawsuit is brought. Another idea is to reconsider internal investigations when officers are suspected of on the road misconduct. In particular, internal collision investigations may be treated similarly to officer involved shootings, rather than other forms of misconduct.

That's because officers in most cases are found to be inattentive rather than to have committed serious misconduct. A previous change in policy, instituted in 2008, sought to reduce the workload on Internal Affairs investigators by assigning points to officers who caused collisions. As with points accrual systems in department of motor vehicles' records, officers are issued points in accordance with the crash's severity. Driver retraining and loss of driving privileges are two of the consequences associated with accumulating too many points in too short a period of time.

Even so, while the points system correlates with a decrease in the number of crashes between 2009 and 2011, it hasn't helped stem the flow of new lawsuits. Forty percent more lawsuits were filed in the three years after the point system was established than in the three years before it which is leading to a review of the points system along with other collision policies.

The Latest and Greatest Technology

The annual SHOT Show® has traditionally focused on promoting new firearms, ammunition, outdoor apparel and related products. However, over the past several years, this event has included a law enforcement section which has grown considerably. Because this event is normally held at the beginning of every year, scores of manufacturers now utilize this trade show to introduce many of their new products. To follow are a number of these new products which we feel are of particular value to the law enforcement community:

New Push-to-Talk

The U94 Switch, a low cost push-to-talk from TEA, features a right- or left-hand configuration and an optional input can accommodate auxiliary switches or gas mask microphone systems. A strong back clip provides a secure attachment even in high impact situations.

New Field Screening Checklist May Help Police Respond to People with Mental Illness

A 20 factor form, currently being field-tested in two Canadian police departments, may help officers across North America improve how they identify the mentally ill. Designed by an Ontario Police College instructor and coordinator of tactical communications and mental health issues, the anonymous survey allows officers to record characteristics associated with the subjects they encounter. Some of these characteristics include whether the subject experiences hallucinations; has violent thoughts; has used weapons; displays suicidal or threatening behavior; is inappropriately dressed for the weather; and so on. Both police and healthcare professionals contributed to the checklist's development.

The form is intended to help officers explain (in terms medical staff can understand) why they believe a subject is mentally ill – especially if they think the subject is dangerous. This should help police more easily transfer custody to a hospital, especially when dealing with smaller facilities whose staff may not be trained to recognize mental illnesses.

Over the long term, with enough collected data, researchers hope it will be possible to correlate observable characteristics with a risk of dangerous behavior. If this is true, it could be used to improve officer training.

For more information on how to identify and manage suspects who may be mentally ill, read Not Just Another Call...Police Response to People with Mental Illnesses: A Practical Guide for the Frontline Officer which is available to download at www.pmhl.ca/webpages/reports/Not_Just_Another_Call.pdf.

Harvard Research Examines Sleep Deprivation Among Police Officers

Comprehensive new research from Harvard University, believed to be the first study of its kind, shows that 40% of 5,000 police officers surveyed across the US and Canada suffer from sleep disorders – most are undiagnosed.

Researchers first surveyed the officers about their sleep habits and sleep disorder symptoms. They then followed the officers over two years, analyzing their job performance. What they found was that sleep deprived officers' odds of falling asleep at the wheel were 51% higher than rested officers, and they were 43% more likely to make serious administrative errors. Sleep deprived officers fall asleep in meetings and on phone calls and call in sick more often. One in three officers – eight times as many as among the general population – has sleep apnea. And, officers who screened positive for a sleep disorder were 25% more likely to express uncontrolled anger to a suspect or citizen and 35% more likely for a citizen to file a complaint against them.

Sleep apnea is of particular concern: It's linked to heart disease. Officers suffering from the apnea were found to have 90% greater odds of developing cardiovascular disease, along with higher risks for diabetes, depression, emotional burnout, and falling asleep at the wheel on the way home from work. (Researchers believe this is a main reason why traffic collisions have become the number one cause of death among police officers.)

However, researchers also found that Massachusetts state troopers have a much lower incidence of sleep apnea than other officers they studied. They believe that's because the troopers are less likely to be obese – one of sleep apnea's primary risk factors. In Massachusetts, troopers must pass an annual fitness test and the state provides both equipment and paid time for their workouts. Researchers believe these costs are far less than costs associated with healthcare and accidents.

Another alternative is to make changes to shift schedules. Research funded by the National Institute of Justice shows that workweeks made up of four ten-hour shifts improves officers' sleep habits, as well as reducing overtime costs. However, they do not adversely affect performance. Read more about that study at www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/nij/grants/237330.pdf or about the Harvard Study at http://jama.ama-assn.org/content/306/23/2567.full.pdf.

NEWS

Web Site Helps Police Identify Most Wanted Suspects

Police often need the public's assistance with recognizing suspects. A new Web site, www.idthisperson.com, facilitates this assistance. By offering rewards of $25 to individuals who can identify suspects or persons of interest, member law enforcement agencies can use the site in much the same way they might use TV news or social media.

Once they've accessed the site, individual users can click on their own state (or any other state) to view wanted people's pictures. They can then – under their own name or anonymously – provide any information they know about a person: name, nickname, location, etc. This is of particular benefit in multijurisdictional cases or crimes where the suspect is from out of state.

For now, only 13 states use the site. However, because it is advertiser supported (including the rewards), it is free for police departments. For more information, see www.idthisperson.com.

Newest Meth Challenges: An Overabundance of One Pot "Labs" and Burn Patients

"Shake and bake" or "one pot" methamphetamine labs have been around for a few years. Because the method requires less pseudoephedrine, manufacturers can stay within legal limits for pharmacy sales. They often make meth for their own use rather than for sale – not just at home, but sometimes in public bathrooms or vehicles. About 80% of the labs which the DEA raided in 2010 used the one pot method.

But, law enforcement agencies' budgets have been scaled back in many communities, hurting their ability to find the smaller labs. Legal pseudoephedrine purchases make it harder to differentiate legitimate from illicit buyers. Going after smaller labs can distract police from bigger drug operations, including those run by foreign cartels. And, the cost of meth lab cleanup often falls to law enforcement following the raids. Federal grant money can help, but it can be used up quickly. Unlike other drug dealing, meth doesn't generate forfeitable funds because users either make it for themselves or trade it for raw ingredients, including pseudoephedrine.

Another unintended consequence of more people using this method is burn injuries. One pot meth manufacturers mix their ingredients inside two liter soda bottles. If they remove the cap too soon or somehow puncture the bottle, the toxic mix inside can explode. Burn injuries to the torso, hands, face, and even lungs are common because patients were holding the bottle. For this reason, meth-related burn injuries have increased; fires which started in full-scale meth labs were easily escapable.

The average cost of burn treatment is $6,000 a day; the average meth patient's hospital stay costs $130,000, more than other burn patients (often because they stay longer than nonmeth burn patients and require more surgery and ventilator support). In the United States' most prolific meth making states, up to one-third of some burn units' patients had been making meth when they were hurt. And, because most of those patients are uninsured – only ten percent have private insurance, compared to 59% of nonmeth burn patients – they've unduly burdened burn units. Nationwide, seven have closed or consolidated in the last six years.

Meth-related burn patients often lie about the cause of their injuries, blaming them on vehicle or household maintenance. This makes it hard to track numbers, including costs. It also makes treating them difficult because the burns' origin can be both thermal and chemical, and patients with addictions present further complications. Long term, that can impact their ability to reenter society through the workforce.

Some states are considering requiring a prescription for all pseudoephedrine-based cold medicine – even over-the-counter brands. In states like Oregon and Mississippi which have already passed such laws, meth lab operations have decreased significantly. Another alternative is a national tracking network – financed by pharmaceutical companies – which would monitor all sales.

ARE YOU SUFFERING FROM PAIN CAUSED BY YOUR DUTY BELT?

Police officers who have used the Back Defender have reported a decrease in lower back pain, foot pain, kidney pressure, headaches, sleep loss, fatigue, hip bruising, and leg numbness/tingling – all caused by their duty belt!

- Concealed
- Removes the weight of a duty belt off of hips and lower back
- Allows officer to engage in foot pursuits without the need to hold on to the belt
- Allows for full range of motion
- No uniform modifications needed

Free Retail Investigation Tool Helps Police Research Transactions

A Web-based tool allows law enforcement investigators to research transactions which are relevant to their cases – for free. SIRAS® P.I. (Product Information) provides unique product serial numbers, manufacturer shipping, and retailer point of sale information (such as time and date, cash register location, etc.) of hundreds of millions of consumer electronics and other retail items. SIRAS overall tracks top retailers' and manufacturers' products.

SIRAS' database information has been utilized in shoplifting, organized retail crime, identity theft, and E-fencing investigations. More than 4,000 federal, state, county, and local law enforcement agencies across North America subscribe to SIRAS P.I. which enables them to work together with retailers to identify criminals.

Access to the SIRAS P.I. Web site requires a username and password. For more information, or to become a user, please visit www.siras.com/cc/accessrequest/signup.htm or send an E-mail to info@siras.com.

Detroit Pilot Program Cuts Desk Jobs, Puts More Police on Streets

The Detroit Police Department has launched a pilot program aimed at keeping the city's streets safer. By limiting the number of desk officers assigned to districts and precincts between 4:00 p.m. and 8:00 a.m. – peak calls for service hours – and reassigning those personnel to road patrol, the agency believes it will be able to offset recent cuts in both budget and overall staffing.

In lieu of visiting districts, citizens are encouraged to use the Telephone Crime Reporting Unit for nonemergency calls. That unit will add officers on restricted duty to help increase staff. The agency is also looking into instituting on-line reporting for minor crimes.

Report clerks, desk clerks, law enforcement information network operators, security officers, timekeepers and maintenance officers are examples of positions which will be eliminated in favor of road patrol. Besides these changes, investigations will be consolidated from districts and precincts to Central District.

The new program has met with some controversy; however, Police Chief Ralph Godbee, Jr. has said that the precincts and districts will never be closed outright, and the department is seeking adjustments to federal grants in order to retain jobs.

"CopBook™" Gives Information Sharing a Facebook-like Feel – Securely

The Redlands (CA) Police Department has developed a new way for its employees to share information. The Facebook-like CopBook, funded by the Bureau of Justice Assistance and developed in partnership with The Efiia Group, enables officers to securely search data and share with members by function (patrol, for instance) or individual interest.

CopBook is designed to not just facilitate internal communication, but also to involve other agencies and, possibly, in the long run, the public. For now, Redlands police officials believe that a modern communication platform will make it easier for tech savvy officers to share information amongst one another. In use since early 2011, CopBook is a natural progression along the continuum of the agency's social media use. Having found great success with their deployments of Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube, Redlands police believe that the more intelligence they gain and share, the faster they can solve crime.

The Redlands Police Department, the first municipal law enforcement agency to adopt CopBook, hopes the platform will become a model for other departments nationwide. For more information, see www.efiia.com.

NRA 2011 Law Enforcement Officer of the Year

Deputy Michael S. Zack
Cecil County Maryland Sheriff's Department

Deputy Michael S. Zack exemplifies the professionalism of our nation's best law enforcement officers who view their role as a sacred trust.

His fellow Deputy may well be alive today because of Zack's heroism.

I can think of no one more deserving of recognition as NRA Law Enforcement Officer of the Year than Deputy Zack.

David A. Keene
NRA President

On January 6, 2011, a Cecil County Maryland Sheriff's Office Deputy attempted to stop a motorist for a minor traffic offense. The violator ignored the deputy's signals to stop, and a 10-mile pursuit began. At one point during the pursuit, the violator stopped, placed his vehicle in reverse, and rammed the pursuing deputy's cruiser. Identified through a license plate check, the driver was found to have a suspended driver's license, and there were reports that he had been aggressive against law enforcement, local government officials, and may be unstable.

Off-duty Cecil County Deputy First Class Michael Zack, traveling in his take-home cruiser, was unaware of the pending pursuit until he saw a cruiser at a distance in his rear view mirror with its emergency lights on. He then heard radio traffic about the traffic stop and that the driver might attempt to flee.

Despite other deputies being dispatched to provide back up, having only his off-duty pistol and credentials, and in civilian clothes, Deputy Zack turned his cruiser around to assist his fellow deputy without hesitation. As Deputy Zack finished a u-turn, the pursuit began. The suspect sped towards him and moved his car directly into the path of Deputy Zack's cruiser in an attempt to hit him head-on. After taking evasive action, Deputy Zack was able to turn back around, join in the pursuit and provide immediate back-up, and took charge of the communications.

The pursuit's path indicated that the suspect was heading for his residence, so Deputy Zack terminated the pursuit to protect innocent citizens from further danger. He hoped the suspect would slow down and stop driving recklessly when he saw the cruisers back off.

After reaching the suspect's residence, the deputies located the suspect's vehicle and searched the open area as they moved independently towards the house. Reaching the front door first, Deputy Zack's partner saw that it was open. As he began visually searching the entrance area, he saw the suspect with a sawed-off shotgun in his hand. Hearing his partner commanding the suspect to drop the shotgun, Deputy Zack ran to his partner's location, where he saw the gunman raising the shotgun towards his partner. Seeing Deputy Zack's movement off to his side, the gunman turned his attention away from the deputy and aimed the shotgun at Deputy Zack's head. Deputy Zack immediately engaged the gunman with multiple shots, dropping the gunman to the floor, and ending the confrontation.

From the beginning to the end of the incident, Deputy Zack played a major role. His response to aid a fellow deputy without hesitation, despite being off-duty and without his ballistic vest and duty gear, was without a doubt above and beyond the call of duty. Deputy Zack's valorous act of placing himself in harm's way to draw the attention of the gunman away from his partner is a credit to himself, his department, and the community he serves. His personal actions to quickly end the gunman's actions ensured the safety of other responding deputies and neighborhood residents.

His calmness, professionalism and heroism are in keeping with the highest traditions of law enforcement. It is with great honor and pride that the National Rifle Association names Deputy First Class Michael S. Zack of the Cecil County Maryland Sheriff's Office as the 2011 NRA Law Enforcement Officer of the Year.

NRA's Law Enforcement Officer of the Year Award was established in 1993, and recognizes exceptional valor, public service, and dedication to the principles of our Constitutional heritage.

Entry forms for nominating candidates for the Law Enforcement Officer of the Year Award may be downloaded at www.nrahq.org/law/graphics/leoy.pdf. Entry forms must be submitted by September 1.

Nominations are accepted from anyone having knowledge of the nominee's actions. This includes, but is not limited to, the nominee's agency head, other law enforcement officials, elected officials, fellow officers, community leaders, interested citizens, and NRA members.

For more information about NRA's Law Enforcement Officer of the Year Award and its Law Enforcement Division, call (703) 267-1632 or send an e-mail to LE@nrahq.org.

Synthetic Marijuana Makers Change Recipes to Skirt State Laws

NEWS

"Spice" or "herbal incense," a synthetic marijuana which was banned in many states, has returned under new recipes which contain none of the ten chemicals listed in state laws like Virginia's. Outlawed because it caused hallucinations, vomiting, anxiety, seizures, accelerated heart rate, and was a factor in some teens' deaths, Spice ranks behind only authentic marijuana as high school seniors' most often used illicit substance. Drug tests don't reveal its use and it's easily bought on-line. Some users believe that the new formula is more potent than the original; Spice-related calls to state poison control centers have more than doubled to about 6,300 in 2011.

Spice is made by spraying ordinary herbs with chemical compounds designed to act like THC, marijuana's active ingredient. The compounds, called cannabinoids, cost $15 to $25 per gram; hundreds exist, not all with banned raw ingredients. And, not enough is known about those compounds to say whether they are similar to the originals which first came out in 2008. That's why the most recent raids have not resulted in charges filed.

While it's believed that media attention on the drug has helped to educate both retailers and buyers alike about the dangers, lawmakers are taking a second look at their bans, and federal legislators seek to ban not just the compounds, but also the chemical classes to which they belong.

This prototype smart bullet very accurately hits laser designated targets at distances of over a mile.

Guided missiles and smart bombs have been around for quite a while. Now, two engineers at the Sandia National Laboratories in Albuquerque, NM, have invented a self-guided bullet. Red Jones and Brian Kast (both hunters) and their colleagues developed a prototype laser guided bullet for small caliber, smoothbore firearms.

How Does It Work?

An optical sensor in the bullet's nose detects the laser beam aimed on a target. The sensor sends this information to the guidance and control electronics also located in the bullet. Miniaturization allows the sensor and electronics to be included into a four inch long bullet. An algorithm in an eight bit central processing unit commands electromagnetic actuators which steer tiny fins guiding the bullet to the target.

The gun firing the guided bullet does not use rifling to spin the projectile for straight and stable flight. Because the guided bullet must be able to turn in flight toward a target, it does not spin. Instead, it flies straight due to its aerodynamic design consisting of a center of gravity sitting forward in the projectile and tiny fins which enable it to fly stably without spin, just as a dart flies. This also simplifies the design. Plastic sabots provide a gas seal between the projectile and the gun bore, as well as protect the delicate fins. The sabot drops off when the bullet emerges from the barrel of the firearm.

Flight Path

As the bullet flies through the air, it pitches and yaws at a set rate determined by the projectile's mass and size. In larger guided missiles, the rate of flight path corrections is relatively slow, so each correction needs to be very precise because fewer corrections are possible during flight. Because of the guided bullet's small size and mass, corrections are made much faster and more often – 30 times per second. Therefore, corrections do not have to be as precise each time and overcorrections are tolerated.

So far, the researchers have successfully proved the design works in computer simulations which show it would result in dramatic improvements in accuracy. Computer simulations showed that a regular unguided bullet under real-world conditions could miss a target located over a half mile away by nearly 30 feet. In contrast, a guided bullet would get within eight inches.

Field testing of prototypes built from commercially available components showed that the battery and electronics could survive the bullet's launch from the gun. High-speed video recorded the bullet radically pitching as it exited the barrel. The bullet pitches less as it flies downrange, a phenomenon known to long-range firearms experts as "going to sleep." Because the bullet's motions settle the longer it is in flight, accuracy actually improves at longer ranges.

In this time exposure photo, a tiny LED attached to a self-guided prototype bullet shows a bright path during a nighttime field test, proving the battery and electronics could survive the bullet's launch.

Testing

Testing has shown that the electromagnetic actuator performs well and the bullet can reach speeds of 2,400 feet per second, or Mach 2.1, using commercially available gunpowder. The researchers are confident it could reach standard military speeds using customized gunpowder.

While there are still engineering issues to be addressed, the researchers are confident the engineering technology is available to solve the problems. Sandia is now seeking to partner with a private company to complete testing of the prototype and bring a guided bullet to market. Potential customers include the military, law enforcement and recreational shooters.

GPS Tracking Requires a Warrant

Larry E. Holtz, Esq.

The Supreme Court recently affirmed a lower court ruling that reversed a conviction because of GPS evidence which was obtained without a warrant.

Recently, in United States v. Jones (U.S. 1-23-2012), the Court held that the attachment of a Global Positioning System (GPS) tracking device to an individual's vehicle, and subsequent use of that device to monitor the vehicle's movements on public streets, requires a warrant, for such actions constitute a "search" within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment.

Defendant Antoine Jones, "owner and operator of a nightclub in the District of Columbia, came under suspicion of trafficking in narcotics and was made the target of an investigation by a joint FBI and Metropolitan Police Department task force." Officers employed various investigative techniques, including applying for a warrant authorizing the use of an electronic tracking device on the Jeep® Grand Cherokee used by Jones. "A warrant [was] issued, authorizing installation of the device in the District of Columbia and within ten days."

"On the 11th day, and not in the District of Columbia but in Maryland, agents installed a GPS tracking device on the undercarriage of the Jeep while it was parked in a public parking lot. Over the next 28 days, the Government used the device to track the vehicle's movements." Through the use of various signals from multiple satellites, "the device established the vehicle's location within 50 to 100 feet and communicated that location by cellular phone to a Government computer. It relayed more than 2,000 pages of data over the four week period." Due to the location and untimely nature of the warrant's execution, however, the courts treated this as a "warrantless use" of the GPS device.

Warrantless Use

The Government ultimately obtained a multiple count indictment charging Jones and several coconspirators with various drug-related offenses.

At trial, the prosecution introduced the GPS-derived locational data "which connected Jones to the alleged conspirators' stash house which contained $850,000 in cash, 97 kilograms of cocaine, and one kilogram of cocaine base." Jones was convicted, but the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals reversed.

Agreeing with the Court of Appeals, the United States Supreme Court ruled that the admission of evidence obtained by the "warrantless" use of the GPS device violated the Fourth Amendment, for "the Government's installation of a GPS device on [the] target's vehicle, and its use of that device to monitor the vehicle's movements," constituted an illegal "search."

Preliminarily, the Court pointed out that the Fourth Amendment safeguards "[t]he right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures[.]" And, according to the Court, "it is beyond dispute that a vehicle is an 'effect' as that term is used in the Amendment." Said the Court:

It is important to be clear about what occurred in this case: The Government physically occupied private property for the purpose of obtaining information. We have no doubt that such a physical intrusion would have been considered a "search" within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment when it was adopted.

During the course of this appeal, the Government contended that "no search occurred here, since Jones had no 'reasonable expectation of privacy' in the area of the Jeep accessed by Government agents (its underbody) and in the locations of the Jeep on the public roads which were visible to all." (citing Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 [1967]) Rejecting that contention, the Court said:

Jones's Fourth Amendment rights do not rise or fall with the Katz [reasonable expectation of privacy] formulation. * * * Katz did not erode the principle "that, when the Government does engage in physical intrusion of a constitutionally protected area in order to obtain information, that intrusion may constitute a violation of the Fourth Amendment." * * *

Previous Cases

During the course of its opinion, the Court distinguished two cases in which it previously rejected Fourth Amendment challenges to "beepers" – electronic tracking devices which represent another form of electronic monitoring. The first case, United States v. Knotts, 460 U.S. 276 (1983), upheld the use of a "beeper" which "had been placed in a container of chloroform, allowing law enforcement to monitor the location of the container." The Court determined that "there had been no infringement of Knotts' reasonable expectation of privacy since the information obtained –

The Tactical Communications Unit provides a quick easy way to establish the first communications with a barricaded subject. The system takes only minutes to set up and requires no operation by the subject. The system provides a remote speaker / microphone (usually thrown) that is placed in the vicinity of the subject. No phone to answer, no box to open, just talk and listen. The system operates from 12-volt automotive or 120-volt commercial power so you never have to worry about dead batteries before or during a negotiation. The system provides two outputs for additional negotiators to listen and one for tape recording both sides of the communication.

the location of the automobile carrying the container on public roads, and the location of the off-loaded container in open fields near Knotts' cabin – had been voluntarily conveyed to the public. * * * The beeper had been placed in the container before it came into Knotts' possession with the consent of the then owner[,]" and "Knotts did not challenge that installation."

In the second "beeper" case, United States v. Karo, 468 U.S. 705 (1984), the Court "addressed the question left open by Knotts, whether the installation of a beeper in a container amounted to a search or seizure. * * * As in Knotts, at the time the beeper was installed, the container belonged to a third party, and it did not come into possession of the defendant until later. Thus, the [main issue] was whether the installation 'with the consent of the original owner, constitute[d] a search or seizure . . . when the container is delivered to a buyer having no knowledge of the presence of the beeper." The Court held that it did not. The Government "came into physical contact with the container only before it belonged to the defendant Karo; and the transfer of the container with the unmonitored beeper inside did not convey any information and thus did not invade Karo's privacy. * * * Karo accepted the container as it came to him, beeper and all, and was therefore not entitled to object to the beeper's presence, even though it was used to monitor the container's location."

The Difference

Unlike what occurred in Knotts and Karo, "Jones, who possessed the Jeep at the time the Government trespassorily inserted the information gathering device, is on much different footing. * * * '[T]he officers in this case did more than conduct a visual inspection of [Jones'] vehicle[.]' * * * By attaching the device to the Jeep, officers encroached on a protected area." That action, said the Court, constituted "a classic trespassory search." When the Government "physically invades personal property" here, a physical intrusion on Jones' Jeep "to gather information, a search occurs." Since that search was performed without a valid warrant, it constituted a violation of the Fourth Amendment.

Government Program Hires Veterans as First Responders

A new initiative, the Veterans Jobs Corps, seeks to hire war veterans as police officers, firefighters, and other first responders. A response to layoffs forced by state and local budget cuts, the new program goes a step further than the Recovery Act which provided government assistance to communities, so they wouldn't have to lay off first responders. It will enable veterans to get jobs without having to compete for them once they leave military service and will draw on the skills they developed helping to build communities overseas.

POLICE K-9 DISCOVERS MAN WITH NO BRAIN!...

A New York man who seems to love doggies got himself into trouble in Binghamton, New York. It's not a crime to love dogs, but when he felt he wanted to pet a police K9, and the dog's handler obliged, it apparently did not occur to him that these dogs are used by law enforcement agencies because of their uncanny ability to smell. When he leaned over to pet Tarah, the dog detected the smell of marijuana and alerted the officer. A quick search confirmed that the hapless animal lover was indeed in possession and he was busted on the spot. (What an amazing coincidence...now they're both in the doghouse!)

"Yabba – dabba – DOOFUS!"... Police in Roseville, Michigan, arrested a 24-year-old roofer and charged him with reckless driving after he hit four cars. He had noticed that his brakes had failed, but unadvisedly tried to drive on anyway by extending his left leg out the driver's side door and braking "manually." That may have worked for Fred Flintstone, but it didn't work for the roofer. According to police, the man was completely sober. (Maybe if he had quickly opened a can of spinach and ate it, he would've had the leg strength to stop his car.)

When honesty is not the best policy, insanity is the best defense!... In Lehigh County, Pennsylvania, a man who was charged with robbing 25 hotels and convenience stores over a three month period later opted to represent himself in court. Like most who step up to the challenge, he quickly discovered that he did indeed have a fool for a client. As he was questioning one of the robbery victims, he asked him to describe what the robber sounded like. The witness replied, "He sounded like you." No further questions. Not to be deterred, the man called another witness and again asked the same question: "What did the robber's voice sound like?" Again, the same reply came from a second witness, "It sounded exactly like you." No further questions. Case closed. (Plan B: Motion for a mistrial based on the fact that the defense attorney is an idiot.)

Now that he's got more time on his hands, he can stop practicing law and teach himself psychotherapy... A man sentenced to prison in 1992 for a number of serious crimes became a notorious jailhouse lawyer (even drafting a book, A Guide to the Plea Circus). As a result of numerous successful challenges, he had reduced his 160 year sentence to 26 – and a release date of 2018. However, he filed one appeal too many. A court ruled in his favor on that final appeal and ordered a new trial altogether (vacating the convictions and sentence, but also the reductions he had worked so hard to get). At the retrial in March 2011, he was found guilty again and, this time, sentenced to four consecutive life terms. (This self-taught lawyer was a lot like one of those "idiot savants," except that he lacked the "savant" part.)

Someone's been watching too many episodes of "The A-Team"... Ukrainian police have detained three suspected thieves who gave new meaning to the term "highway robbery." Police say they stole goods from trucks as they drove on highways at night. The three men, aged 32 to 37, are suspected of involvement in about 30 cases of theft. Police said in a statement, "A car with a specially reinforced hood would drive up behind a truck moving at 40-50 kilometers per hour (25-30 mph). Standing on the hood, one of the thieves would then open the locks with wire cutters, get in and pass the loot over to his accomplice." Police said the gang, which had at least seven cars, was the third of its kind to be busted in the last few years in the region. (Don't they equip Ukrainian trucks with side mirrors?)

Unfortunately, going to church won't make them Christians any more than standing in a garage makes them cars!... Authorities say nonviolent offenders in southern Alabama will have a new choice: Go to jail or go to church every Sunday for a year. The city judge in Bay Minette will let misdemeanor offenders choose to work off their sentences in jail and pay a fine or go to church every Sunday for a year. If offenders select church, they'll be allowed to pick the place of worship, but must check in weekly with the pastor and police. If the one year church attendance program is completed, the offender's case will be dismissed. The Bay Minette police chief says that the program could change the lives of people heading down the wrong path. So far, 56 churches are participating. ("Gee, what happened to all of the money in the offering plate? It was almost full a moment ago!")

"Your Honor, I call the 'witness for the prostitution' – er, uh, sorry – I mean the 'prosecution.' "... A Chicago massage therapist, testifying for the prosecution in August in a sex trafficking trial, happened to notice from the witness stand that the defense lawyer was formerly a client of hers. The judge was duly impressed and immediately declared a mistrial. The attorney later said he visited the accused massage therapist four times in 2009, but that "nothing inappropriate" happened. (If you think the judge was hard on the counselor, try and imagine how his wife reacted to the witness' statement!)

Lucky for her, the clerk didn't have a real Uzi... In Palm Bay, Florida, a woman entered a convenience store wearing a clear plastic mask and toting an Uzi-type toy gun. The clerk, who was stocking items on another aisle, watched as the female robber stumbled toward the register. Realizing he had a likely moron on his hands, the clerk shouted, "Palm Bay Police! Get on the ground!" The robber followed instructions and dropped to the floor. Our quick thinking clerk and another employee then jumped her and held her down until the cops arrived. (By the way, what do you suppose she thought she was covering up by wearing a clear plastic mask to rob a store?)

"When this van's a rockin', don't come a knockin'!" ... Smugglers had dug tunnels from Nogales, Mexico, underneath the border to Nogales, Arizona, engineering them so precisely that they ended along International Street's metered parking spaces. The smugglers would then park vans with false bottoms in certain spaces (making sure to feed the meters). They would then break though the pavement to meet the tunnelers and then load the drugs. While remaining in the parking spots, the vans' crews repaired the pavement and the vans departed. The Arizona city's mayor simply said, "Unbelievable!" (They had enough room for jackhammers, asphalt, road construction equipment and illegal drug shipments in those vans?)
